GOLDSMITH'S POVERTY.

Wretched Misery of the Amlable but Imprudent Author.

In 1758, two years after Goldsmith returned from his wanderings on the continent, he presented himself at Surgeons' hall for examination as a hospital mate, with the view of entering the army or navy; but he suffered the mortification of being rejected as unqualified. That be might appear before the examining surgeon suitably dressed Goldsmith obtained a new suit of clothes, for which Griffiths, the publisher of the Monthly Review, became security. The clothes were to be returned immediately when the pur pose was served, or the debt was to be discharged. Poor Goldsmith, having failed in his object and probably distreased by urgent want, pawned the clothes. The publisher threatened, and Goldsmith replied:

"I know of no misery but a jail, to which my own imprudence and your letter seem to point. I have seen it inevitable these three or four weeks and, by heavens, request it as a favor -a favor that may prevent something more fatal. I have been some year struggling with a wretched being, with all that contempt and indigence bring with it, with all those strong passions on?" which make contempt insupportable. Same Bulla,

Last year, in the north of Ireland the following came under my observation. In a hotel the porter, for my information and dutifully in furtherance of the interests of his employers, remarked, "If you want a drive, sir, you needn't go out of the hotel," meaning. of course, that carriages formed part of the establishment.

Another bull was in a conversation overheard between two workmen. One the question, "Were you acquainted with So-and-so?" to which the reply was, "No; he was dead before I knew him." An Irish friend of mine was de-

Strange Story of Girl Who Fled From Virginia Woods.

SOLD FOR $5 AND A HORSE.

Ignorant of Her Parentage, She Tolled For Her Purchaser and Never Knew That There Was Anything Else In

Twelve years a white slave, ignorant that there was a world beyond the dark woodlands of Chesterfield county, Va., or a sphere in life above the plow and oxen and cows, there has lived within an hour's ride of the capitol in Richmond a girl-woman whose history, just revealed, is the most amazing Virginia has ever heard.

Eleanora is the only name the young woman has ever had. Despite the life she has been forced to live she is still attractive. She has big brown eyes and a heavy mass of dark hair. Under other circumstances she might have been beautiful. But she is as ignorant as a savage. She never saw a school, if she ever heard of one. She did not know what the word meant.

The twelve years of Eleanora's slavery have held nothing but hard, bitter work. In rough clothing, sometimes man's trousers and boots, she was obliged to fell trees with an ax, to gulde the ox team that drew the plow across the hard, stony fields, to dig ditches and dam streams and to care for the farm animals.

She received no reward. She was permitted no pleasure. A shakedown bed on an attle floor and a scant al lowance of food were all she got out of her years of labor.

Eleanora since her arrival in Richmond not long ago has been working to support herself, while her friends are investigating her history. She laughed like a child when she received her first wages. She seldom saw any money and had never had a cent of her own before.

There came to Richmond a committee of farmers from the Virginia hills in Chesterfield, and they told the story to J. Kent Rawley, an attorney. He journeyed out into the country and investigated. From what he saw and heard he became convinced of the truth of the tale. Then the farmers and neighbors who knew of Eleanora's sufferings contributed from their small savings enough to retain Mr. Rawley. He is soon to bring suit against Eleanora's late master.

The girl was instructed to run away from her place of captivity and come to Richmond. She did so and has been in good hands ever since.

It was on the farm of J. J. Cawley, a dairyman, that Eleanora speat her life, and against Cawley the suit will be brought, alleging he bought her when she was a child and has kept her in peonage ever since.

From information and rumor picked up from various sources Lawyer Rawley has pieced together a story something like this:

woman lived in an old house near the An but of old Palmore, the hermit of Chesterfield county. A child was born to them, a little girl, who was called Eleanorn. The father's name was Gulder or Gulden. The mother was Lizzle Murrin or Morrell, Within a month after the birth of the child the father disappeared. Soon afterward the mother vanished, too, and in some fashion the baby was cared for by the hermit. Nine years later Palmore retired still farther into the woods. But before he went, the story has it, he offered the child to Cawley for $5 and an old broken down horse that the dairyman had turned out to die.

Cawley, it is said, bought the girl, gave the hermit the money and horse, and there is a story of a signed and sealed paper passing between the men over the bargain. At all events Eleanora has been on the Cawley place ever since. She learned that she was not the Cawleys' child and asked them who her parents were, but they never told her. Neither would Palmore, whom she saw occasionally. Long ago she ceased trying to learn her identity and became a hopeless, spiritless slave. She did not even have ambition enough to escape. She did not know there were cities and towns mear Chesterfield county.
